Title	An Overview of Cryptoassets Valuation Methods
Language	English
Supervisor	Laura Grassi
Thesis Summary	Motivated by the performances and the volatility of cryptocurrencies and tokens, I wondered how such new “cryptoassets” could accrue value. I first examined the roles and the functions that they can perform within their ecosystems, then, with the help of the existing literature, I presented a taxonomy based on their main utility feature. After that, I analysed the cryptoassets market from an internal perspective and I compared it as a whole with the US stock market. Subsequently, I reviewed the models proposed by practitioners and thinkers in the blockchain industry to assess the fundamental value of these new instruments. In this examination I underlined both the meaningful intuitions and the main shortcomings. Finally, I employed the previously presented taxonomy and I showed the most-fitting valuation models for each asset class. Such models are both those presented in the literature review and those used in traditional assets valuation. The conclusion of this work is that, heretofore, even by adopting a structured approach, it is possible to obtain only insights into the fundamental value of cryptoassets and not to evaluate it univocally.
